Welcome to the Butterflies for Maddy.

Thank you all so very much for your continuous compassion, generosity & support throughout the Foundation's endless efforts to save women's lives. This deadly disease has plagued women for over 45 years, but with YOUR help, change IS happening!

Each one of you is making a difference by helping to advance women's health policy, and by educating & creating awareness of menstrual Toxic Shock Syndrome (mTSS). This fashion show, honoring my beautiful, precious daughter, Maddy, who passed away on March 30, 2017 from mTSS at the young age of 19, is just the beginning.

Maddy had this unmatched love for life. She was full of compassion, thoughtfulness, positivity, happiness, determination, beauty, kindness, silliness & inspiration. Her fun loving bright smile and contagious laugh will always be remembered through the joy she brought to our lives.

She is an angel ~ laughing, smiling & soaring freely, high above watching over us. Maddy you are loved beyond measure and missed more than ever imaginable.

The Mission

Every day, the lives of women and girls are threatened by menstrual toxic shock syndrome (MTSS) due to tampon use and lack of education regarding the associated risks, dangers, signs, and symptoms of this serious and preventable illness. Our mission is to make the world safer for our daughters, sisters, friends, and wives.

Our foundation has been making a difference worldwide from speaking engagements and articles in international publications to working with legislators creating bills that change women's healthcare. We will not rest until women have been empowered with the necessary, life-saving educational materials to help prevent complications and needless deaths from MTSS.

About the Founders

Dawn Massabni
President & CEO

Dawn is the mother of Maddy and George Massabni. She has made it her life's work to prevent another precious life lost to mTSS.

Dawn obtained her B.S. in Marketing from Fairleigh Dickinson University. As a procurement analyst for the Department of the Army, Dawn managed over 100 interns and developed several work training programs that are still used today.

Dawn has dedicated immeasurable volunteer hours over the past 20 years to community organizations including schools and youth programs.

George is Maddy's brother and best friend.

George has his Master's and B.S. in Criminology and Criminal Justice from the University of Tampa. He is a member of the National Society of Leadership and Success and is skilled in management, leadership, communications, writing, and research.

George has managed a local, growing, family-owned restaurant and coached a successful college lacrosse team. George has also volunteered with numerous local organizations, doing everything from working in the kitchen to coaching lacrosse for underprivileged youth.

Today, George is a teacher at Rumson-Fair Haven Regional High School in Rumson, NJ. He loves working with the kids and has a true desire to instill positivity, create a positive environment, help mold tomorrow's future, make life better among individuals, and provide knowledge to help others and make a change in this world. George is also the Rumson-Fair Haven Regional High School Junior Varsity Coach for both boys Lacrosse and Soccer!

Madalyn's Law

Bill No. S636/A3567

Requires school districts to incorporate age-appropriate instruction grades 4-12 on menstrual Toxic Shock Syndrome and requires installation of warning signage in certain women's rooms to enhance public awareness of mTSS. The warning sign also shall be installed on or near a tampon dispenser.

To help pass this Bill, contact:

MEDICAL QUESTIONS ACT

BILL No. S2010/A2540

This bill requires nurse practitioners, who practice nursing in emergency medicine, family medicine, general obstetrics, or gynecology to ask patients questions regarding menstrual cycles, previous tampon use, and on toxic shock syndrome.

If exhibiting signs associated with influenza or viral gastroenteritis, and the patient has an active menstrual cycle, or recent date of the last menstrual cycle, the nurse practitioner or doctor will ask when the patient most recently used a tampon, and if the patient experienced symptoms associated with influenza or viral gastroenteritis while using the tampon or soon thereafter.

It is here that mTSS will be caught in the very beginning and save a life.

DON'T SHOCK ME

Maddy Massabni

Saturday, November 26th marked the Second Annual Don't Shock Me Flag Football Game. The Don't Shock Me Foundation, founded in 2018 to honor Maddy Massabni ('16), hosted the football tournament with some help from the Character Education Club. Co-founder and RFH's very own teacher and alumni, George Massabni ('13), said his favorite part about this event is spreading awareness and education about menstrual Toxic Shock Syndrome (mTSS). Currently, the foundation is working to install Madalyn's Law, which would educate students in grades 4-12 about menstrual toxic shock. The event was attended by many members of the Rumson-Fair Haven community and the organization is appreciative of the support. They look forward to continuing this event for years to come. In the spring, Don't Shock Me will host a fashion show, Butterflies for Maddy, where students design outfits for three teams and compete to win prizes.

Fisher House Foundation builds comfort homes where military & veteran families can stay free of charge, while a loved one is in the hospital.

These homes are located at military and VA medical centers around the world.

Fisher Houses have up to 21 suites, with private bedrooms and baths. Families share a common kitchen, laundry facilities, a warm dining room, and an inviting living room.

Since inception, the program has saved military and veterans' families an estimated $547 million in out-of-pocket costs for lodging and transportation.

Fisher House Foundation also operates the Hero Miles program, using donated frequent flyer miles to bring family members to the bedside of injured service members as well as the Hotels for Heroes program using donated hotel points to allow family members to stay at hotels near medical centers without charge. The Foundation also manages a grant program that supports other charities and scholarship funds for military children, spouses, and children of fallen and disabled veterans.

THE TWO RIVER TIMES

Shocking and Not-So-Shocking Details About Toxic Shock Syndrome

It gained notoriety in the late 1970s when the use of tampons for menstruation became popular. At that time cases of toxic shock syndrome (TSS), the rare, life-threatening complication of certain types of bacterial infections, dotted the headlines, sending fear through women, parents of young daughters and many others.

According to Robert A. Graebe, M.D., chairman and program director of Obstetrics & Gynecology at Monmouth Medical Center, the synthetic material and high absorbency of a tampon that allows it to retain blood products can also create a cultural medium for bacteria to grow and toxins to follow.

“It wasn’t so much bacteria was growing, as it was releasing toxins,” Graebe said.

And despite all the press surrounding tampons, TSS doesn’t just affect those who use the product. The use of other devices, such as menstrual cups, contraceptive sponges or diaphragms and, in fact, any skin lacerations or surgical procedures and recovery practices – episiotomies or nasal packing – can put people at risk for the syndrome.

“Any wound post-op, anyone high risk immunologically, can be affected,” Graebe said. Often patients are prescribed antibiotics before and after surgeries and procedures to mitigate bacterial growth and decrease the likelihood of TSS.

What is most important is diagnosing the infection early on. Symptoms including sudden high fever, low blood pressure, vomiting and a rash resembling a sunburn, possibly on palms and soles, should send out alarms, especially if those symptoms accompany or follow tampon use. Patients can become hypotensive and, as the infection progresses, the symptoms can grow more serious. “Organs can be damaged or limbs lost,” said Graebe. And in some cases, patients can die.

“Early diagnosis, rapid treatment and the correct treatment really pave the way to benefit the patient,” Graebe said. “A rapid response is called for; it’s critical to get fluids going.”

When it comes to menstrual TSS, “It’s a problem that needs to be talked about,” said Graebe. “Part of the prevention... would require that people be aware. And that if it does happen, they should notify doctors.” Graebe thinks teaching awareness includes reaching menstruating females. “Pediatricians and ob/gyn, family practice doctors, nurse practitioners who encounter young females should all explain the threat (of TSS) and make them aware of it.”

He also said tampons should not be used on a continuous basis, alternating with pads – and use of one tampon should be limited to four and no more than eight hours. He also said one tampon should not be used for more than four or eight hours. For Dawn Massabni of Rumson, spreading the message of TSS has become her life’s work since she lost her 19-year-old daughter Madalyn to the infection six years ago.

“We are talking about menstrual toxic shock syndrome,” said Massabni, founder of Don’t Shock Me: The Maddy Massabni Foundation for Toxic Shock Awareness, “because that’s what we lost Maddy to.”

When Maddy, a 2016 Rumson-Fair Haven graduate, was home on spring break from studying fashion design at Lynn University in Florida, she fell ill with fever and vomiting, thinking it was a simple stomach virus. By the time they got to the hospital, her organs had already begun shutting down.

“They put her on antibiotics,” Massabni said, “although it did not help.

She also noted that not every symptom has to be present for it to be TSS. “Not everyone gets the same symptoms,” she said. “Maddy had no rash.”

Massabni and her son George started Don’t Shock Me in 2018. Since then, Massabni, an EMT, has educated herself on menstrual TSS. “I’ve done that by talking to doctors, microbiologists, many educators who were kind enough to sit down with me and talk to me.”

“We are the only foundation like this in the whole world,” Massabni said.

She has traveled the country on speaking engagements, sharing the knowledge she has gained and the importance of being aware of symptoms – and her personal heartbreak, all with the hope that if menstrual TSS affects someone, they will know what to do.

“You know your body. If you have symptoms of flu, this may not be a flu. Let the doctor know” if you’ve recently used a tampon, she said.

TSS is often misdiagnosed, she said, noting she meets victims who have survived and that the condition is more common than many people believe. She has also met young women who developed TSS after wearing a tampon for a shorter time than physicians recommend. Despite improvements in tampon production, Massabni worries about carcinogen properties that may still be in many of these products. “A woman could use 16,000 tampons in a lifetime,” she said. “That’s a lot of dioxin.”

Now that Don’t Shock Me is gaining a foothold spreading its message, they have installed a board of directors and are making more headway, Massabni said. The foundation will hold a Fashion Show “Butterflies for Maddy,” May 24 at Windows on the Water at Surf Rider Beach Club in Sea Bright.

“We are doing well, because lives are being saved,” she said.

Yet she still grieves for Madalyn. “I cry every day,” she said. “She was my best friend in the whole world. I do it for her because I can’t be a mom like everyone else. This is all I can give her. She would do this herself.”

The foundation is working to bring about legislation to help spread awareness through Madalyn’s Law that will establish mandatory, age-appropriate menstrual TSS education in grades 5-12 and warning signs in all public restrooms and on feminine hygiene vending machines in public restrooms.

“Also, we want menstrual toxic shock syndrome discussed in well visits for girls of menstrual age,” she said.

The foundation spreads the word by offering to speak to groups of young people – schools, Scouts, anyone who will listen – emphasizing how to recognize the symptoms of menstrual TSS in themselves, in their sisters, girlfriends and others.

They offer informational cards listing symptoms of TSS to include in period poverty packets – menstrual hygiene products distributed to low-income women.

“We want to save lives,” Massabni said. For information, visit dontshockme.org.

Thank you for attending "Butterflies for Maddy"

We hope that you have enjoyed this amazingly beautiful evening, and all the incredible fashions donated by our very own local boutiques, our amazing volunteer models that worked that catwalk like pros, the time spent with your friends, family, and perhaps some strangers too!

We ask that you please share the important information you have learned tonight about menstrual Toxic Shock Syndrome (mTSS) with everyone you know. It is with this knowledge each of you will now play a role in saving a life. Is there a more beautiful gift one can give?

Thank you for being a part of this very special evening, sharing your time with us, and honoring Madalyn. We are immensely grateful for all you have done to help continue the forward progress of our mission. Your incredible generosity, love, and compassion will never be forgotten.

With Gratitude ~ Dawn, Georgie, and our Angel Maddy

I would like to thank my dear friend, Jimmy LoBiondo, and his family, for once again opening their hearts to the Foundation through "Butterflies for Maddy."

This beautiful event would not have been possible if not for their generosity & kindness.

Jimmy is a longtime friend that has known my kids since they were little. He has understood my journey of heartbreak, pain and witnessed my daily struggle to smile.

The compassion, kindness, and acceptance he has shown is immeasurable.

The beach was Maddy's favorite place and is where she spent much of her time there, even in the winter, as it was so calming to her. Knowing this, Jimmy made sure that my Maddy was able to watch the ocean waves crash from Heaven, as Georgie and I, as well as all those who loved Maddy, said our farewells.

My heart is so very grateful to the LoBiondo Family for giving us the opportunity to have Maddy enjoy the waves crash again as we honor her, all of the mTSS victims & survivors, and all of you, at "Butterflies for Maddy," here at the beach, her most favorite place on earth.

Thank you Jimmy, Paul, and the entire LoBiondo Family.
You will always hold a special place in my heart.

Love, Dawn, Georgie, and my Angel Maddy
